Programs at the 198 engineering schools that grant doctoral degrees were surveyed; 193 responded; 192 were eligible to be included in the rankings based on a weighted average of the 10 indicators described below. (All schools are listed in the directory, beginning on Page 129.)

Quality assessment (weighted by .40): Two surveys were conducted in fall 2007. Engineering school deans and deans of graduate studies at engineering schools were each asked to rate program quality from marginal (1) to outstanding (5); 59 percent responded. The resulting score is weighted by .25. Corporate recruiters and company contacts who hire engineers with graduate degrees from previously ranked engineering schools were also asked to rate programs; 29 percent responded. Their opinions are weighted by .15.

Student selectivity (.10): The strength of master's and Ph.D. students entering in fall 2007 was measured by mean GRE quantitative score (67.5 percent) and acceptance rate (32.5 percent).

Faculty resources (.25): Based on the 2007 ratio of full-time doctoral students to full-time faculty (30 percent) and full-time master's students to full-time faculty (15 percent); the proportion of full-time faculty who were members of the National Academy of Engineering in 2007 (30 percent); and the number of engineering doctoral degrees granted in the past school year (25 percent).

Research activity (.25): Based on total externally funded engineering research expenditures (60 percent) and research dollars per full-time tenured and tenure-track engineering faculty member (40 percent). Expenditures refer to separately funded research, public and private, conducted by the school, averaged over fiscal years 2006 and 2007.

Overall rank: Data were standardized about their means, and standardized scores were weighted, totaled, and rescaled so that the top-scoring school received 100; others received their percentage of the top score.

Specialty rankings: These rankings are based solely on assessments by department heads in each specialty area. Department heads in their specialty area rated the other schools that offered the specialty on a 5-point scale. Those schools with the highest average scores appear here. Names of the department heads who were surveyed came from the American Society for Engineering Education.
